The Place to be Embraced

Beneath the open sky so wide, Where sun and moon take turns to ride, Nature weaves its quiet spell, A story only the earth can tell. The whisper of leaves in the breeze,

The sight of flowers, there to please, Mountains stand tall, ancient and strong, Their peaks touching clouds where droplets belong. Birds compose melodies at dawn, Insects hum their tiny songs, And every creature, big or small, Plays a part in nature's grand ball.

So let's give importance to this Earth. Cherish its beauty, recognize its worth, Together, let's celebrate this precious place, For World Nature Conservation Day, embrace its grace.

Mental Health: Now's the time to speak up dearth of avenues for indiince ancient times, mental health has oeen considered taboo in our country. Individuals grappling with mental health issues often face exclusion from society simply because they are perceived as different or mentally unstable. However, it's crucial to remember that they are human beings too. Have you ever considered that they too can experience distress? In today's world, depression seems to be prevalent everywhere.

Reports of suicide and depression cases have become all too common. This alarming trend stems from a lack of understanding and a break this silence. At the first sign of any mental health symptom, it's imperative to seek help from a psychologist. We must not ostracize individuals facing mental health challenges; instead, we should offer them viduals to share their feelings. Sadly, mental health remains a topic shrouded in silence, deemed taboo in our society. Now is the time to support to overcome their struggles. If even one reader recognises the importance of mental health after reading this article, it has achieved its purpose.
